

Missouri GOP's Policy/ Principle Disconnect

By DAVID COOK
President

The leadership of Missouri's Republican Party seems to suffer a major disconnect between their avowed conservative principles and their actual policy priorities.

The platform of the Missouri GOP states, "The government that governs best governs least." This preference for small government has a long tradition in U.S. political history, typically dated all the way back to Thomas Jefferson and his followers in the earliest days of our Republic.

Small government is a tenet of Republican Party ideology. All of the declared GOP candidates for the Presidency eagerly highlight their small government credentials, closely adhering to President Ronald Reagan's maxim that "Man is not free unless government is limited."

The Republican leadership of the Missouri General Assembly, however, seems to have abandoned this core principle when it comes to its policymaking preferences.

Right-to-work, which Governor Nixon recently vetoed, is an obvious exercise in government overreach. Not only does it unnecessarily insert the government into every single private collective bargaining relationship in the state, it also imposes severe penalties on employers for exercising their basic right to enter into contracts.

How can this intrusive measure be reconciled with small government principles?

Some Republican members of the General Assembly may want to reflect on their core principles before they return to Jefferson City for the September veto session. These anti-worker proponents should consider joining the numerous members of their party who stand by their core principles — and with Missouri workers in opposing 'right-to-work' laws.

LOCAL 655 SHOWS ITS PRIDE Local 655 officers and members were out in full force Saturday, marching to support the LGBTQIA (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, questioning, intersex, asexual and ally) community at the 2015 PrideFest Parade held in downtown St. Louis—two days after a landmark Supreme Court ruling making gay marriage legal in the United States.

Local 655 shows Union pride at St. Louis PrideFest Parade

More than 30 people marched with Local 655 in the 2015 St. Louis PrideFest Parade on June 28th in Downtown St. Louis. This was our third year participating in the parade, which promotes equal rights for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered people.

The parade, always a high-spirited energetic event, took on special significance this year following the recent Supreme Court ruling which guarantees equal marriage rights for same-sex partners.

The air of celebration at PrideFest was infectious, but we know well there is still much work to be done to ensure full equality for LGBT people in our state and throughout our country.

For instance in a majority of states, including Missouri, any individual can be fired simply because of their sexual orientation or identity. In Missouri, and 31 other states, the only formal defense that LGBT workers have against workplace discrimination is a strong Union contract.

We encourage all of our LGBT members and allies to join our local OUTreach group and to advocate for both LGBT rights at work and for building our Union. For more information about OUTreach contact Laura Kelley at 636-736-2760, or LKelley@ufcw655.org.
